Designer

Kacey Royer, creator of Found Wanderer has always found a joy in creating things and expressing herself through her work. Kacey has a great love for people and the ability to create things. She believes that her business, Found Wanderer, was created through her personality and drive to delve into her interests and creative side.

Originally, Found Wanderer went by the name of Found. When Kacey first started designing and creating her jewelry, her business mostly involved searching for "found" objects to turn into various types of jewelry. This involved the use of natural stones, vintage beads and varieties of string and chain. Kacey became very interested in the use of crystals in her designs. She began using a variety of stones and crystals as well as mixtures of vintage chain, beads, and metal findings. This transformation in her designs led to the transformation of Found into Found Wanderer.

For the last year and a half Kacey has sold her beautiful handmade jewelry at Redeux Marketplace. Redeux is a vintage and handmade marketplace on Duke Street in York. Kacey gives credit to Redeux for giving her the opportunity to create what she calls the "Found Wanderer Wall." Kacey was one of the first vendors to set up at Redeux, and was given the opportunity to have her own pop-up like shop within the store, among a few other vendors. Redeux gave Kacey the ability to sell my jewelry around other talented and motivational artists, as well as show off the natural beauty of her jewelry so her followers and customers can see her jewels before purchasing.

Before she started selling her jewelry at Redeux, Kacey was a part of a group in York City who sold their handmade goods at Central Market. This gave Kacey the ability to grow as an artist and learn the ins and outs of being a young business woman. Found Wanderer can be located online through the Etsy shop and Instagram. Through the growth of her business, Kacey has been able to meet such wonderful people and also has gotten the chance to send her jewelry to national TV personalities, actors and producers.

Artist

There is some validity to the adage tortured artist. It comes from an artist's ability to be brutally empathetic towards everyone and everything, internalizing every bit. This is the state where Bo's art thrives. "Most of my inspiration is born from negativity, whether it be a personal sadness, political injustice, or just something that bothers me that I formulate an opinion on," he said. When Bo began creating art in third grade, he was "intrigued by the lack of authority and rules in art." It was his personal freedom.

Now, it is freedom of speech. The twenty-year-old focuses on provocative art that pushes a message while releasing his own emotion. He is the friend that wants to heal the wounds and prevent anyone else's scabs. His artwork conveys the importance of acceptance, human rights, individuality, and anti-suicide.

For example, his piece "News Leech" symbolizes the media's drastic impact on how humans are able to function as a society. "Hook, Line, and Sinker" shows that over fishing and over hunting halts the biological progression of species while potentially killing the species entirely.

Bo's message takes a strong footing in the York City community, where young creatives are buzzing with ambition. His passion that began as a personal expression is exploring how to unite the individuality of a culture.
